Fellow-Citizens of the United States Your suffrages having elevated me to the office of Pravident of the United States, I have, in conformity with the Constitution of our country taken the oath of office prescribed therein. have taken this oath without mental reservation. and with the determination to perform with my utmost ability all that it requires of me. The 'esponsibilities of position I feel to be great, but accept them without fear. The office has come to me unsought. I commence its duties uptrammelled: I bring to it a conscientions desire and determination to fill is to the best of my ability and to the satisfaction of the people. On the leading questions agitating the public mind I will always express my viewe to Congress, and urge them according to my judgment; and when I think it advisable. I will exercise my constitutional privilege of interposing a veto for the defeat of measures which, in my opinion, opnose the public welfare. But all law will be fuithfully executed, whether they meet my upprobation or not. I shall, on all subjects, have a policy to recommend, but none to enforce; against the will of the people. Laws are made to govern alike those who are opposed to them, as well as those who favor them. I know no method to secure the repeal of had and obnoxious laws so effective as their stringent execution; The country baving just emerged from a great ebellion, many questions will come before it for commont in the next four years, which preceeding Administrations have never had to deal with. In meeting these it is desirable that they should be approached calmly, and without prejudice, buts or personal pride—that the greatest good to the greatest number be attained. This requires security for person, and property, and for religious and political opinions of overy part of our common country, without regard to local prejudice. All laws to secure these ends will receive my best offorts for their enforcement. A great debt has been contracted, in scouring to us and our postcrity the banefite of the Union.
